BOOK SYNOPSIS

Tattoos don't define a person's character, or make him sexy. But, if you ask Sam Madison, they sure don't hurt. Dr. Travis Nelson has a passion for ink but keeps his many tattoos covered by long sleeves and trousers. He's aware that as a pediatrician he'll be judged not only by the other physicians in his practice, but also by the parents of his young patients. When Sam Madison takes his young nephew, Levi, to be seen for an ear infection, he's immediately attracted to Travis and the feeling is mutual. But Sam's sister Melanie is going through a rough time and caring for Levi, and covering her obligations, keeps Sam occupied. He feels like he's in no position to start a relationship. Travis sees things differently, though he's unable to truly understand the deep bond and connection Sam shares with his twin. As Melanie's life goes from bad to worse, Sam is forced to make difficult decisions. Is protecting Levi enough of a reason for the two men to stay together, or will fighting for the child ultimately tear them apart?
